Foreword from the Minister for Local Government

Local residents who know the area and can offer solutions to issues that are causing concern in the community are ideal candidates to be councillors.

Local councils play an important role in leading and shaping their communities

Local councils provide the infrastructure and services that local people need, and they ensure that community resources are managed responsibly.

Statewide, local councils spend nearly $10 billion per year on services and facilities and provide employment for more than 50,000 people.

Serving your community by becoming a councillor is a rewarding and challenging experience. Local councils need leaders who reflect the diverse nature of their communities and understand what matters to local people – leaders who are willing to stand up and make a positive difference.

There are more than 1,400 councillors across NSW and they come from all walks of life. But some groups are currently under-represented and we need to do more to ensure councils reflect the diversity of their communities.

In the 2012 local government elections, women made up just 27% of local councillors and only 19% of mayors, even though half of the state's population are women. Only 16% of NSW councils had elected representatives who identified as Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islanders. Only 8% of councillors spoke a language other than English at home and just 4% of councillors were aged under 29. Clearly, some voices are not being heard.

The NSW Government is committed to improving opportunities for all community members to participate in local leadership, and the upcoming council elections are particularly important, with the first elections for our 20 new councils. This opens a new chapter for these communities to build a shared direction and a prosperous future together. I would encourage prospective candidates to read this guide and reflect on the role they might play in helping to shape their community.

Many people hesitate to stand for office because they are unsure of what the role involves, or whether they have the right skills to become a councillor. This guide will help you to make that important decision. We have made some recent changes to the Local Government Act to ensure that the role of councillor is much clearer and that people elected to office receive the help and support they need to develop their leadership and professional skills.

If you have a passion for your community, and a willingness to learn new skills and work with others to make a positive difference, then I would encourage you to consider standing for your local council.

The Hon. Gabrielle Upton MP
Minister for the Environment
Minister for Local Government
Minister for Heritage

Councillors: ordinary people with an extraordinary passion for their community

Who can be a councillor?

If you are passionate about your local community then you already have what it takes to become a councillor. Everything else you need to know about taking the step and nominating for election is in this guide.

There are no special qualifications to become a councillor other than a desire to serve your community. If you are eligible to vote at an election for your council, you can also stand as a candidate for election to the council. You'll benefit from the skills you develop – and you can learn most of these skills on the job.

“A councillor's role is important. The decisions a council makes and the services it provides can change local communities and environments.”

Being a councillor is a rewarding opportunity to:

- make decisions that help people in your local community
- influence the long term vision and direction for your community
- learn new skills, such as leadership, public speaking and advocacy
- work with diverse and passionate people on a range of issues
- balance the needs and priorities of your community
- show leadership and make the best decisions for your community.

More information about who can be a councillor is contained later in this guide.

Being a voice for the local community: why is diverse representation on council important?

Diverse representation helps to ensure the needs of different groups in the local community are taken into account when council makes decisions.

NSW is one of the most diverse and inclusive societies in the world.

Across the state, local communities are made up of a mix of people from a diverse range of backgrounds with different needs and interests. These groups include Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds, people with a disability, women and young people.

However, there is an under representation of diverse groups of people among elected representatives and in the workforce of many NSW councils.

Local councils need diversity among councillors to reflect the diverse needs of community members.

If a community is diverse, their councillors should be too. This will lead to better leadership and decision making to create stronger councils and better outcomes for local communities.

Information and statistics on local government representation can be found in the Candidates and Councillors 2012 Report available at www.olg.nsw.gov.au.

Do you have what it takes to be a councillor?

As well as enthusiasm and a passion to improve your local community, you should be willing to embrace new skills and training to make being a councillor easier.

Helpful attributes for councillors include:

- communication skills, including listening and interpersonal skills, public speaking, networking, respecting different opinions, negotiation, mediation, and knowledge of conflict resolution
- problem solving skills and the ability to get to the core of problems and find solutions
- willingness to work as a team for the benefit of the community
- good organisation skills like time management and priority setting
- ability to understand financial reports, including budget processes
- readiness to engage effectively with the community
- understanding of social justice principles

- understanding of the role and services of local government and an ability to understand relevant state government legislation
- leadership qualities, including energy, motivation, resilience, confidence, assertiveness, strategic thinking and advocacy skills
- ethical and accountable behaviour, and a commitment to act in the best interests of the community as a whole.

While this may seem like a long list, as a councillor you will receive information and training to help you develop these skills. Being elected as a councillor is an opportunity to serve your community, and this opportunity involves a commitment of your time.

There is a range of factors that determine how many hours councillors spend each week on council activities, including the size of the council and the issues that arise.

Being a councillor is not without its challenges, including:

- substantial time commitment
- making decisions that are not always popular with the community
- being a single issue candidate, but not a single issue councillor
- balancing individual constituent needs with those of the wider community

- working with other councillors and people who may hold very different views to you
- balancing your commitments to the council and the community with your own family and work obligations
- experiencing an initial steep learning curve.

Being a councillor is a four-year commitment. It will absorb a lot of your time as councillors are expected to attend all council meetings.

The exact number of meetings depends on individual councils, but each council must meet at least 10 times a year. If you miss three consecutive council meetings without getting a prior leave of absence from the council, your office will automatically become vacant.

In the end, standing for council is a personal choice. Only you can understand your own circumstances and what the time commitment means for you. It is a good idea to talk to your family and friends about your plans to serve your community and run for election.

To get a good idea of the time it takes to be a councillor in your area, talk to a past or present local councillor.

How do councillors serve their communities?

Councillors work together to make decisions about what the council will do to meet community needs and how money should be spent in the best interests of the whole community.

Councillors are not involved in the day-to-day running of the council. That is the role of the general manager. More information about the role of a general manager is detailed later in this guide.

Different communities have different needs, and councillors can be involved in a range of issues. The size and make up of local communities, and whether they are in metropolitan, regional or rural areas, can impact the issues that councillors are involved in.

Councillors serve their communities by listening to people in the local area and then representing those views on council.

A councillor's role includes:

- attending council meetings, often in the evenings and usually at least once a month
- reading council business papers and preparing for council meetings
- reviewing council's strategic plans, policies and budget on a regular basis to check if progress is on target
- speaking to members of the community about their needs and concerns.

Other activities that a councillor might become involved in are:

- taking part in special council committees, such as local traffic or planning committees
- inspecting progress on council projects like road works or building a new library
- being aware of problems with council assets that need to be reported, such as damage to sports fields or broken signs
- participating in civic events, like presenting sporting and other awards and attending citizenship ceremonies
- representing council at events and conferences, such as the Local Government NSW Annual Conference.

What are councillors' ethical obligations?

Councillors are expected to comply with the ethical standards outlined in the Model Code of Conduct for Local Councils in NSW.

It is important that communities have confidence in the integrity of their local councils, the councillors they elect and the decisions those councillors make. Councillor misconduct can erode that trust.

Serious breaches of councils' codes of conduct can carry significant penalties including suspension from office for up to six months. Councillors who are suspended on three or more occasions are disqualified from holding office in a council for five years.

Councillors must be mindful that their actions, including when acting in a private capacity, may have the potential to reflect badly on their council. For this reason, councillors are expected to observe the highest standards of personal conduct at all times.

Local government: what it is and why it matters

Councils in NSW provide a wide range of services and activities. What often first springs to mind when people think about the role of local government are services such as garbage collection. However, councils have a much wider and more important role than many people realise.

The big picture: How do federal, state and local governments relate?

Local government does not exist in isolation. It is important for councils to maintain strong relationships across different levels of government, between and within councils, and within the community

Federal, state and local governments each play distinct and important roles. The diagram below gives examples of the typical responsibilities of the three spheres of government in Australia.

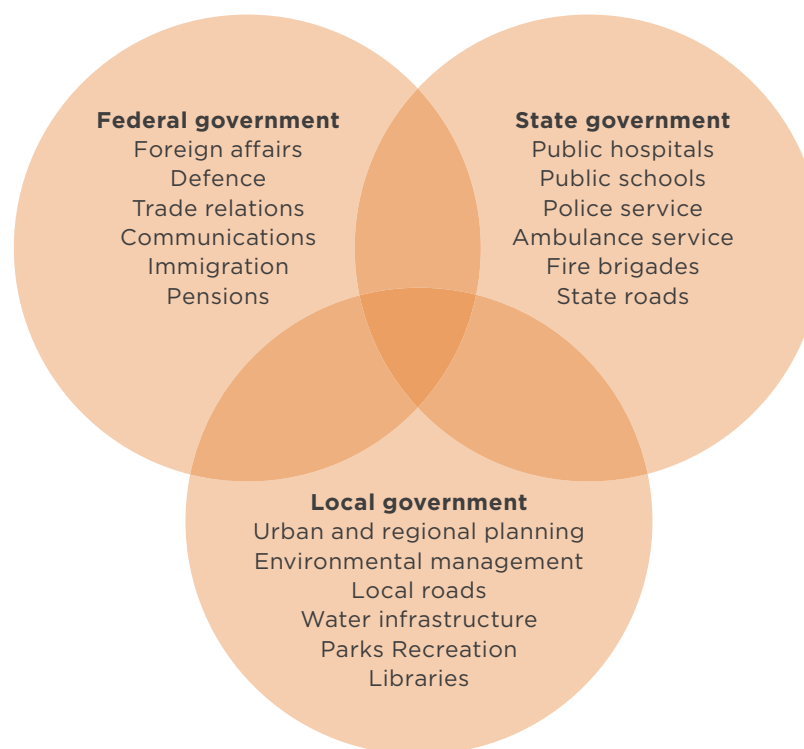

Some parts of the NSW Government which are particularly important for councils to work with are:

- Office of Local Government,
- Department of Planning and Environment
- Office of Environment and Heritage.

Councils in NSW also have important working relationships with groups such as:

- Local Government NSW
- Local Government Professionals Australia (NSW)
- Australian Local Government Women's Association.

Three spheres of government

Guiding principles: How should councils operate?

The Local Government Act 1993 (the Act) outlines principles to help councils operate in a way that promotes strong, healthy and prosperous communities.

When exercising their functions, councils should:

- provide strong and effective representation, leadership, planning and decision-making
- carry out functions in a way that provides the best possible value for residents and ratepayers
- plan strategically, using the integrated planning and reporting framework to provide effective and efficient services and regulations to meet the diverse needs of the local community
- apply the integrated planning and reporting framework to achieve desired outcomes and continuous improvements
- co-operate with other councils and the state government to achieve desired outcomes
- manage lands and other assets to meet current and future community needs in an affordable way
- work with others to secure appropriate community services

- act fairly, ethically and without bias in the interests of the local community
- be responsible employers and provide a consultative and supportive working environment for staff.

In making decisions, councils should:

- recognise diverse local community needs and interests
- consider social justice principles
- consider the long term and cumulative effects of actions on future generations
- consider the principles of ecologically sustainable development
- ensure decision making is transparent and decision makers are accountable.

In exercising their functions, councils should actively engage with communities through the integrated planning and reporting framework and other measures.

Councils should also consider the principles of sound financial management prescribed by the Act in exercising their functions.

The community benefits: what services and functions do councils provide?

Councils provide services that fall under five broad categories. The list below provides a sample of some of the services provided by councils – but there are many other activities councils undertake.

The range and quality of services provided by a council is shaped by a number of factors, including the:

- availability of funds
- size, location and demographics of the area
- commitment to maintain existing services
- views, wishes and needs of the community.

Planning for sustainable development

Councils play a role in providing long term strategic planning for local government areas, as well as in town planning, zoning and subdivisions. In addition, councils are responsible for processing most development applications, building site and compliance inspections, building regulations and connections to water and sewerage.

Providing and maintaining infrastructure

Providing local infrastructure is an important contribution councils make to their communities. For example, councils provide and maintain local roads and bridges, public car parks, footpaths, sporting fields, parks, libraries and art galleries. Councils must consult with their communities about providing and maintaining these assets.

Protecting the environment

Councils regularly assess the state of their local environments, provide environmental programs and use their regulatory powers to prevent pollution or restore degraded environments. They carry out activities such as garbage collection and recycling, street cleaning, regulating parking, controlling dogs and cats and controlling noxious weeds.

Providing community services and development

Councils consult with and assess the needs of their communities, and use the information to target community development activities. They provide a range of services, including some aimed at groups in the community with special needs. Community services include libraries, retirement homes, home care services such as Meals on Wheels, swimming pools, playground facilities and child care centres.

Safeguarding public health

Councils help maintain high standards of public health and reduce the risk of exposure to a wide range of diseases through activities such as inspections of cafes and restaurants, waste management, pest and vermin control and hazardous material containment.

Money matters: services cost money, but where does it come from?

Councils raise money from the local community through rates, charges and fees. They can also borrow and invest money.

All councils receive a Financial Assistance Grant each year, which is paid by the federal government through the state government via the NSW Grants Commission.

The amount of the grant varies from council to council. Councils may also be eligible to receive grants from a variety of other sources.

Local government: how it works

Working relationships: how do councillors and staff work together?

A good working relationship between councillors, the mayor, the general manager and other council staff is fundamental to an effective council.

The roles of key people in councils, including councillors and the general manager, are carefully defined in the Local Government Act 1993 to avoid any confusion.

What is the role of the governing body?

Councillors collectively comprise the governing body of a council.

Under the Act, the role of the governing body is to:

- direct and control the affairs of council in consultation with the general manager
- provide effective civic leadership
- ensure as far as possible the financial sustainability of council
- ensure as far as possible that council acts in accordance with the principles prescribed under the Act and other relevant plans, programs, strategies and policies of council
- develop and endorse the community strategic plan, and delivery program and other plans, programs, strategies and policies of council
- determine and adopt a rating and revenue policy and operational plans to ensure council resources are allocated appropriately
- regularly review council's performance, including service delivery
- make decisions that support the proper exercise of council's regulatory functions
- determine the process for appointing the general manager and managing their performance
- determine senior staff positions within the organisation structure of council
- consult with community organisations and stakeholders about council decisions and activities
- ensure council acts honestly, efficiently and appropriately.

What is the role of individual councillors?

Under the Act, each councillor has a responsibility to:

- be an active and contributing member of the governing body
- make considered and well informed decisions
- participate in developing council's integrated planning and reporting framework
- represent the collective interests of residents, ratepayers and the local community
- facilitate communication between the local community and the governing body
- uphold and accurately represent the policies and decisions of the governing body
- make all reasonable efforts to acquire and maintain the skills necessary to perform the role of a councillor.

Councillors are both individually and collectively accountable to the local community for the performance of the council.

Oath of Office

Under the Act, councillors are obliged to take an oath or affirmation of office either at or before the first council meeting after they are elected.

Councillors are required to swear or affirm they will carry out the duties of the office of councillor in the best interests of the local community and the council.

They must also swear or affirm they will faithfully and impartially carry out the functions of councillor to the best of their abilities.

This oath or affirmation is a mechanism for inducting councillors into the role. It also reinforces the seriousness of the responsibilities and duties of being a councillor.

A councillor who fails to take the oath or affirmation of office without a reasonable excuse, will not be entitled to attend council meetings until they do so.

If they miss three consecutive ordinary council meetings without a reasonable excuse, their office is automatically declared vacant and a by-election will be held.

What is the role of the mayor?

The mayor is often considered the voice of the council and the leader of the community.

While the mayor essentially has the same roles and responsibilities as a councillor, they are also expected to exercise a leadership role. This is reflected in their additional responsibilities.

Under the Act, the Mayor's role is to:

- be the leader of the council and a leader in the local community
 - advance community cohesion and promote civic awareness
 - be the principal member and spokesperson of the governing body, including representing the views of council about local priorities
 - exercise the policy-making functions of the governing body between meetings of the council, where necessary
 - preside at council meetings and ensure they are conducted efficiently, effectively and in accordance with the Act
- ensure council's strategic plans, programs and policies are developed and adopted in a timely way
 - promote the effective and consistent implementation of council's strategic plans, programs and policies
 - promote partnerships between council and key stakeholders
 - advise, consult with, and provide strategic direction to the general manager about council's strategic plans and policies
 - together with the general manager, ensure there are adequate opportunities and mechanisms for engagement between council and the local community
 - perform civic and ceremonial functions
 - represent the council on regional organisations and at regional, state and federal inter-governmental forums

- in consultation with councillors, lead performance appraisals of the general manager
- exercise any other functions that the council determines.

Mayors can either be elected by the community or by the councillors. If elected by the community, mayors hold office for the full four years. Mayors that are elected by councillors hold office for two years.

Check with your local council to learn how the mayor is elected.

What is the role of the general manager?

The general manager is responsible for implementing policies that are formulated and monitored by council.

They are the most senior council employee and the only member of staff selected and appointed by councillors.

The general manager is appointed on a renewable, fixed-term, performance-based contract for a maximum of five years.

Under the Act, the general manager's role is to:

- manage the day-to-day operation of council in accordance with council's strategic plans, programs, strategies and policies
- implement the lawful decisions of the council
- advise the mayor and governing body about council's strategic plans, programs, strategies and policies
- advise the mayor and governing body about consulting with the community about council's strategic plans, programs, strategies, policies and other matters

- prepare the community strategic plan and council's community engagement strategy, resourcing strategy, delivery program, operational plan, and annual report in consultation with the mayor and governing body
- ensure the mayor and councillors are provided with timely information and advice and all necessary administrative and professional support
- exercise any functions of council that are delegated by council
- appoint, direct and dismiss staff in accordance with council's organisation structure and the resources approved by council
- implement council's workforce management strategy.

The general manager may delegate functions to other staff.

What is the role of council staff?

Councils employ staff such as town planners, engineers, building surveyors, librarians, environmental officers, rangers and childcare workers.

Council staff carry out the day-to-day operations of the council, and implement council policies and other decisions, as directed by the general manager.

Being a councillor: what help is available to you

What fees are provided to councillors?

Under the Act councillors are entitled to an annual fee, paid in monthly instalments. The fee depends on the size of the council, the number of people it serves and the assets it manages. For example, in 2016 the fees ranged from $8,540 per year for a small rural council to $37,640 for a big metropolitan council.

The mayor of a council also receives an additional fee.

The fees paid to councillors are subject to tax, and may affect your assessable income for tax purposes.

A council may decide to reduce or withhold fees if a councillor does not attend meetings for more than three months. Councillors who are suspended from office are not entitled to receive a fee.

What expenses and facilities can be accessed by councillors?

Councils are also encouraged to provide equipment and facilities to assist councillors with disabilities and special needs to access the services and information they need in order to perform their role.

As well as setting councillor fees, the Act allows councils to cover some of the expenses that councillors incur in carrying out their duties, including travel and telephone expenses.

The range of expenses and facilities provided to councillors varies between councils. A council decides what expenses it will cover and what facilities it will provide to councillors.

Councillor expenses covered by councils may include:

- training courses
- conferences
- travel to and from meetings, conferences and training
- accommodation, meals and refreshments while on council business.
- phone calls and internet use associated with councillor duties
- child care associated with councillor duties.

Councils may also provide facilities for councillors such as computers, fax machines, mobile phones, stationery or administrative assistance. Councils are also encouraged to provide equipment and facilities to assist councillors with disabilities and special needs to access the services and information they need to perform their role.

What training and professional development is available to councillors?

One of the great benefits of being a councillor is the opportunity to undertake structured professional development.

Under the Act, councillors must make all reasonable efforts to acquire and maintain the skills necessary to perform their role.

The Office of Local Government and Local Government NSW provide a range of support for councillors, including training and induction programs.

For example, Local Government NSW provides professional development and training specifically catered to the needs of councillors.

Local Government NSW's Councillor Professional Development Program includes the following modules:

- Community and Stakeholder Engagement
- Chairing and Meeting Procedures
- Elected Life—An Induction Program for Councillors
- Executive Certificate for Elected Members
- Financial Issues in Local Government
- Good Governance
- Know your Planning
- Mayor's Weekend Seminar
- Media Skills
- Model Code of Conduct
- Preventing Bullying and Harassment.

Local Government NSW also provides a free mentoring service for mayors and councillors. These mentors provide confidential advice to support councillors in their role as elected representatives.

The Office of Local Government and Local Government NSW provide a range of support for councillors, including training and induction programs.

Information on the program can be obtained by contacting Local Government NSW via the details provided at the end of this guide.

Individual councils are also expected to provide induction training and ongoing professional development for their councillors.

The nature of these programs varies from council to council.

As a new councillor, you will be encouraged to tell your council about your own training needs and to participate in training and professional development activities offered to you.

Making it happen: how you can stand for election

Check point: am I eligible to nominate as a candidate?

Anyone who is entitled to vote at council elections in NSW is also eligible to stand for election as a councillor.

Before setting off to become a councillor, ensure you are on the electoral roll for the council area and be clear that you're not disqualified from standing for office.

People disqualified from standing for office include people who are:

- currently serving a prison sentence
- convicted of certain election-related or criminal offences
- prohibited from managing companies
- suspended on three or more occasions for misconduct as a councillor
- current state members, if elected, may only hold office as a councillor if they resign from the Parliament before the first council meeting.

Serving judges, the returning officer for elections of the council and council employees are also excluded.

How do I nominate as a candidate?

Getting the nomination process right is an essential step in becoming a councillor. It may sound like a complex process, but if you work through it step by step you will find it is much easier than it seems.

First you need to submit a nomination form. This can be submitted in one of two ways:

- you can be proposed for nomination as a candidate by at least two eligible proposers enrolled for the same ward or area as the one for which you are being nominated. It is wise to have more than two nominators in case it turns out that one is not eligible
- you can be proposed for nomination by the registered officer of a registered political party.

There are a number of forms to complete at this stage and these need to be officially lodged with the returning officer. These forms include a form of consent and a candidate information sheet. There is also a nomination deposit payable to the returning officer in cash or by bank cheque.

Completed nomination papers must reach the returning officer by noon on nomination day. The papers can be delivered personally, emailed, posted or faxed and the returning officer will provide a receipt if you ask for one.

Make sure you check and verify all information provided on nomination forms before lodgement, as it is an offence to make a false statement on election papers.

How do I register as a candidate?

Make sure you do not accept political donations or make payments for electoral expenditure until you are registered.

Understanding when to be registered as a candidate for an election is an important part of your campaign. Registering for an election is a separate process to being nominated for an election.

Make sure you do not accept political donations or make payments for electoral expenditure until you are registered. There are important things you need to know about registering for an election:

- register with the NSW Electoral Commission before you accept any political donations or make payments for electoral expenditure
- if you are a member of a group of candidates your group must also be registered before accepting political donations and making payments for electoral expenditure
- every candidate and group must appoint an official agent when registering for an election
- your official agent is responsible for managing your election campaign finances and operating your campaign account
- your official agent must complete the NSW Electoral Commission's online training for agents or have certain accounting qualifications.

To register and appoint an official agent you need to submit a registration form. The form can be submitted to the NSW Electoral Commission in one of two ways:

- if you are a member of a group use the form to register the group, register each candidate in the group and appoint an official agent to the group and each candidate in the group
- if you are not in a group, or you are standing for mayor, use the form to register as a candidate and appoint your official agent.

If you are not registered you must not accept any political donations or make payment for electoral expenditure until noon on nomination day and you must still appoint an official agent.

Local government elections: when and how are they conducted?

Local government elections in NSW are generally held every four years on the second Saturday in September following a state government election.

Check with your local council when its next elections are to be held.

Councils can choose whether elections are administered by the general manager or the NSW Electoral Commissioner. The process for nominating and registering as a candidate is the same, regardless of who administers the elections.

Being ready: when and how will nominations be called?

Public notice of a council election must be given at least one week before nomination day. Look out for notices of the elections and the call for nominations in your local newspaper.

If there are more nominees than vacancies on council, public notice of a contested election is then given as soon as possible after the nomination day.

How are political parties registered for council elections?

While many candidates stand for election as independents, other candidates choose to affiliate themselves with a political party. Any party that has been registered with the NSW Electoral Commissioner for 12 months prior to the nomination day is entitled to nominate candidates for election. A party that is registered for state government elections is automatically registered for local government elections.

If you need further information on the registration of a political party, contact the NSW Electoral Commission, whose details are provided at the end of this guide.

What are the rules about election material?

To keep elections fair, and ensure voters are not misled, there are strict rules about the information that candidates and their supporters can publish or distribute.

All election material published or distributed from the day the election rolls close until election day must contain the name and address of the person who authorised the material. It must also contain the name and address of the printer.

For councils administering their own elections, the electoral material must be registered with the returning officer for that council.

All election material distributed on election day, including 'how to vote' cards, must be registered with the NSW Electoral Commission or, in the case of a council-run election, with the returning officer.

An application to register electoral material may be made between nomination day and eight days prior to election day.

Electoral advertisements and 'how to vote' material that contain misleading directions about how voters should cast their votes, are banned. Also prohibited is material that suggests a link between a candidate and a political party when no such link exists.

Rules also apply to where electoral material can be placed. These rules can be obtained from the NSW Electoral Commission's website. A person who publishes and distributes electoral material unlawfully can be fined or even dismissed from civic office under certain circumstances.

Counting the votes: how is it done?

In local government elections, votes are counted under either the proportional system or the optional preferential system.

Under the proportional system a candidate is required to gain a quota of votes, either directly or by transfer, in order to be elected. The percentage of votes required to be elected will vary, depending on the number of councillors to be elected. For example, if three councillors are to be elected to a ward, a candidate is required to receive just over 25 per cent of the votes to be elected.

Under the optional preferential system a candidate must receive an absolute majority (50 per cent plus one) of votes, either directly or by transfer, in order to be elected.

The voting system used will depend on the number of vacancies to be filled in a ward or undivided area. The NSW Electoral Commission website has more information on voting systems.

A candidate can make a written request for a vote recount up to 24 hours after being notified of the original count result. They must pay a deposit to cover the cost of the recount, and the deposit is refunded only if the recount changes the election result. In certain circumstances the NSW Electoral Commissioner can direct that a recount be conducted.

How are electoral expenses and donations managed and disclosed?

The election campaign finances of political parties, candidates, groups of candidates, councillors and others must comply with the requirements of the Election Funding, Expenditure and Disclosures Act 1981.

The objectives of the Act are to establish a fair and transparent election funding, expenditure and disclosure scheme in NSW; promote compliance with that scheme; and facilitate public awareness about political donations.

There are strict rules about who can make political donations in NSW and there are caps on political donations.

The NSW Electoral Commission regulates the Act and has the power to investigate and enforce breaches under the Act.

All candidates and groups of candidates must be registered with the NSW Electoral Commission for a local government election prior to accepting political donations or making payments for electoral expenditure.

All candidates and groups of candidates must appoint an official agent who is responsible for managing the candidate or group's political donations and electoral expenditure.

The political donations and electoral expenditure of political parties, candidates, groups of candidates, councillors and others must be disclosed to the NSW Electoral Commission following the end of each financial year.

The NSW Electoral Commission provides support and assistance to candidates and councillors to help them understand their legal obligations regarding political donations and electoral expenditure.
