This body of work has been designed as a result of investigating the use of components. The 'javelin' and 'bow' forms are a repeated motif in my jewellery practice and I have introduced neoprene as another motif in various circular forms. I enjoy the contrast with the highly polished silver, the neoprene is black, matte and soft, the opposite of the qualities that attract me to sterling silver.

This 'lego' jewellery is able to be easily adjusted to make pieces either longer or shorter or even change their function. The client is therefore brought into the design process and is limited only by their imagination.

I hope to create designs that are simple, functional and elegant. I design things that I would like to wear, contemporary and enduring.
